

Creepypasta summative

As we have discussed in class this week, Creepypasta is sort of like an urban legend on steroids. You have read a few examples and we have broken them down. For your summative for this unit, I want you to do a little digging and find a local urban legend, either from here in Somersworth, or from the town you live in (it doesn't HAVE TO be limited to this, but I feel like that makes it more fun), and create your own Creepypasta story. Use the outline below to guide your writing.

- Story must have connections to real life – people, places, etc. – that make it appear more viable.
- Story must be in the horror/suspense category.
- Story should be at least two pages, but try to avoid going over five double spaced pages (we can circle back to this later if you want to dig more deeply into it.)
- Like any summative, you must go through the revision process and use my feedback to correct spelling and grammatical errors, but also to add depth to the story if needed.
- Finally, have some fun with this! This is one of the least rigid styles of writing we will be doing this semester, so you can play around with formatting, context, and many other components of the story, as long as you meet the expectations above.
