

Satire Summative

We have looked at a handful of different types of writing, and you have all experienced other types of writing throughout your school careers. Now that we have played around with a few different styles of satire, you will create your own. This should be a longer type of writing (short story, flash fiction, essay, biography/autobiography, etc) and you will have 3 days to complete a draft. Use feedback from myself and peers to finish the piece.

Use the rubric below to guide your writing.

	4	3	2	1
Source material	Satire clearly relates to the source material with numerous details that display the connection	Satire is relates clearly to the source material, but there are limited details displaying the connection	Satire relates clearly to the source material but has few details displaying the connection	Satire is incomplete and/or does not relate to the source material
Construction	Satire is at least 3 pages, has a clear flow and strong transitions	Satire is at least 3 pages, has a clear flow, and most transitions are strong	Satire is at least 2-1/2 pages, has a clear flow and some effective transitions	Satire is incomplete or confusing due to a lack of organization
Conventions of satire	Satire includes at least 4 different conventions of satire (Exaggeration, incongruity, Reversal, Anachronism, Malapropism)	Satire includes at least 3 different conventions of satire	Satire includes at least 2 different conventions of satire	Satire includes one or fewer conventions of satire
Mechanics	Satire has perfect spelling and grammar	Satire has strong spelling and grammar with limited errors	Satire has good spelling and grammar, but may need slight revision	Satire has significant spelling and/or grammar issues